

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by Universal Trading & Inv. Co., Inc. v. Credit Suisse \(Guernsey\) Ltd., S.D.N.Y., April 5, 2013

20 N.Y.3d 327
Court of Appeals of New York.

Yaakov LICCI, a Minor, by His Father and Natural Guardian, Elihav Licci, and by His Mother and Natural Guardian, Yehudit Licci, et al., Appellants,
v.
LEBANESE CANADIAN BANK,
SAL, Respondent, et al., Defendant.

Nov. 20, 2012.

Synopsis

Background: Israeli residents who were injured or whose family members were killed in series of terrorist rocket attacks on civilians in Israel brought action under the Anti-Terrorism Act, Alien Tort Statute, and Israeli tort law against Lebanese bank, which allegedly facilitated terrorist organization's acts by using correspondent banking account at New York bank to effectuate wire transfers on behalf of terrorist organization totaling several million dollars. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, George B. Daniels, J., 704 F.Supp.2d 403, granted bank's motion to dismiss, and plaintiffs appealed. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, 673 F.3d 50, certified questions.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Read, J., held that:

[1] complaint sufficiently alleged Lebanese bank “transacted business” in New York, and

[2] allegations demonstrated that plaintiffs' claim “arose from” bank's transactions in New York.

Certified questions answered.

West Headnotes (6)

[1] Courts  Purpose, intent, and foreseeability; purposeful availment

The jurisdictional inquiry under New York's long-arm statute necessarily requires examination of the particular facts in each case; and although determining what facts constitute “purposeful availment” is an objective inquiry, it always requires a court to closely examine the defendant's contacts for their quality. McKinney's CPLR 302\(a\)\(1\).

22 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Courts  Banks and banking

Complaints alleging a foreign bank's repeated use of a correspondent account in New York on behalf of a client, in effect, a course of dealing, show purposeful availment, for purposes of New York's long-arm statute, of New York's dependable and transparent banking system, the dollar as a stable and fungible currency, and the predictable jurisdictional and commercial law of New York and the United States. McKinney's CPLR 302\(a\)\(1\).

67 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Courts  Business contacts and activities; transacting or doing business

In effect, the “arise-from” prong of New York's long-arm statute limits the broader “transaction-of-business” prong to confer jurisdiction only over those claims in some way arguably connected to the transaction. McKinney's CPLR 302\(a\)\(1\).

27 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Courts  Business contacts and activities; transacting or doing business

Courts  Torts in general

Allegations that Lebanese bank deliberately used a New York account again and again to effect its support of a terrorist organization and allegedly shared terrorist goals established the articulable nexus or substantial relationship between claims brought against bank by Israeli residents who were injured or whose family members were killed in series of terrorist rocket attacks on civilians in Israel under the Anti-Terrorism Act, Alien Tort Statute, and Israeli tort law, and the bank's business transactions in New York, to satisfy the “arise-from” prong of New York's long-arm statute and support the exercise of specific jurisdiction over the bank. 18 U.S.C.A §§ 1350, 2333(a); McKinney's CPLR 302(a)(1).

64 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Courts  Business contacts and activities; transacting or doing business

Application of the “arise from” prong of the jurisdictional inquiry under New York's long-arm statute varies according to the nature and elements of the particular causes of action pleaded. McKinney's CPLR 302(a)(1).

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Courts  Business contacts and activities; transacting or doing business

New York's long-arm statute does not require that every element of the cause of action pleaded must be related to the New York contacts; rather, where at least one element arises from the New York contacts, the relationship between the business transaction and the claim asserted supports specific jurisdiction under the statute. McKinney's CPLR 302(a)(1).

87 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

696 The Berkman Law Office, LLC, Brooklyn (Robert J. Tolchin of counsel), and Meir Katz of the Maryland bar, admitted pro hac vice, for appellants.

DLA Piper LLP, New York City (Jonathan D. Siegfried, Andrew Deutsch and Joshua Sprague of counsel), for respondent.

OPINION OF THE COURT

READ, J.

*330 894 Plaintiffs are several dozen United States, Canadian, and Israeli citizens who reside in Israel and were injured, or whose family members were killed or injured, in rocket attacks allegedly launched by Hizballah during the Second Lebanon War in July and August 2006. Hizballah is designated by the United States Department of State as an Islamic terrorist organization. Plaintiffs brought suit in July 2008 in Supreme Court against the Lebanese Canadian Bank, SAL (LCB or the bank), a now defunct bank headquartered in Beirut,¹ claiming that LCB, with *331 the aid of codefendant American Express Bank (AmEx), assisted Hizballah in committing these illegal attacks by facilitating international monetary transactions through the Shahid Foundation (Shahid or the foundation),² an entity the complaint identifies as part of the “financial arm” of Hizballah. After AmEx removed the lawsuit to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, plaintiffs filed an amended complaint in January 2009, bringing claims against LCB, depending on their citizenship, for primary and aiding-and-abetting liability for international terrorism under the Anti-Terrorism Act³ (United States citizens); aiding-and-abetting liability for genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity in violation of international law, as made actionable by the Alien Tort Statute (ATS)⁴ (various Canadian and Israelicitizens); 697 895 and negligence and breach of statutory duty in violation of Israeli law⁵ (all but four plaintiffs). Plaintiffs asserted personal jurisdiction over LCB under New York's long-arm statute, which states at CPLR 302(a)(1) as follows:

“(a) Acts which are the basis of jurisdiction. As to a cause of action arising from any of the acts enumerated in this section, a court may exercise personal jurisdiction over any non-domiciliary, or his executor or administrator, who in person or through an agent:

“1. transacts any business within the state ...;” (emphases added).

*332 In April 2009, LCB moved under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure rule 12\(b\)\(2\) to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction, and under Federal Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.⁶ Plaintiffs opposed LCB's motion and submitted evidence linking Hizballah and Shahid, including a declaration from a former Israeli counter-terrorism official attesting to Shahid's status as a financial front for Hizballah. LCB did not operate branches or offices, or maintain employees, in the United States. Its sole point of contact with the United States was a correspondent banking account with AmEx in New York. Plaintiffs allege that LCB used this correspondent account with AmEx to transfer several million dollars by means of "dozens" of international wire transfers on behalf of Shahid; that LCB knew that Hizballah was a terrorist organization and that Shahid was part of its financial arm; that the wire transfers "caused, enabled and facilitated the terrorist rocket attacks" that injured them and their families; and that LCB knew that Hizballah required wire transfer services in order to operate, plan, prepare for and carry out such terrorist attacks. Plaintiffs also claim that LCB's official policy "continuously supports and supported Hizballah and its anti-Israel program, goals and activities"; and that LCB carried out the wire transfers "to assist and advance Hizballah's goal of using terrorism to destroy the State of Israel."

On March 31, 2010, the District Court Judge granted LCB's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, concluding that plaintiffs had not made a prima facie showing under CPLR 302\(a\)\(1\). First, the Judge concluded that LCB had not "transacted business" within the meaning of section 302\(a\)\(1\) because "mere maintenance of [a] correspondent bank account with a financial institution in New York is not, standing alone, a sufficient basis to subject 896 698 a foreign defendant to personal jurisdiction," citing *333 Tamam v. Fransabank SAL, 677.F Supp.2d 720, 727 (S.D.N.Y.2010);⁷ and "active execution through New York of dozens of wire transfers totaling millions of dollars over a multi-year period" does not convert "mere maintenance" into "a 'use' of a correspondent account ... sufficient to confer jurisdiction over a foreign bank" since "no meaningful distinction may be drawn between a foreign bank's maintenance of a correspondent account to effect international wire transfers and its indiscriminate use of that account for that exact purpose" (704 F.Supp.2d at 407–408).

Second, the District Court Judge opined that plaintiffs' claims did not "arise from" LCB's wire transfers in New York because no "articulable nexus or substantial relationship exist[ed] between LCB's general use of its correspondent account for wire transfers through New York and the specific terrorist activities by Hizballah underlying plaintiffs' claims," again citing Tamam (id. at 408; see n. 7, supra). He considered it important that although "plaintiffs allege[d] that [the] transferred funds at issue 'substantially increased' Hizballah's ability to commit rocket attacks, including the ones in which plaintiffs were harmed[, they] themselves [were] not customers of [LCB or AmEx], nor did they have any financial interest in the wired funds" (id.). Next, *334 the Judge observed that the harms suffered by plaintiffs and their family members were caused by rockets, not banking services. As a result, he concluded, "LCB's maintenance or use of its correspondent bank account [was] too attenuated from Hizballah's attacks in Israel to assert personal jurisdiction based solely on wire transfers through New York" (id.).

Additionally, the District Court Judge denied plaintiffs' "alternative request" to conduct limited jurisdictional discovery because "[t]he Court's finding, that LCB's correspondent banking activities [were] insufficient to subject it to jurisdiction, renders the proposed discovery sought by plaintiffs futile" (id.). Having granted 897 699 LCB's motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction, the Judge did not consider whether the pleadings stated a cognizable legal claim.

Plaintiffs appealed the dismissal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.⁸ Noting that in order to determine whether personal jurisdiction exists under CPLR 302\(a\)\(1\), " 'a court must decide (1) whether the defendant 'transacts any business' in New York and, if so, (2) whether [the] cause of action 'aris[es] from' such a business transaction' " (673 F.3d 50, 60 [2012], quoting Best Van Lines, Inc. v. Walker, 490 F.3d 239, 246 [2d Cir.2007]), the Second Circuit has asked us to resolve two questions of New York law regarding this two-prong jurisdictional analysis, which we now consider.

Certified Question No. 1

"(1) Does a foreign bank's maintenance of a correspondent bank account at a financial institution in New York, and use of that account to effect 'dozens' of wire transfers on behalf of a foreign client, constitute a 'transact[ion]' of business in New York within the meaning of N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 302\(a\)\(1\)?" (673 F.3d at 66.)

In asking us this, the Second Circuit observed that we had “apparently not yet addressed the precise question” of “whether a foreign bank’s frequent use of a correspondent account in New York to effect international wire transfers on behalf of an overseas client is an act directed with sufficient purposefulness at New York to constitute a transaction of business” under our long-arm statute (673 F.3d at 62–63). As the court recognized, *335 though, we have discussed similar or related issues in several decisions, first and perhaps most importantly in Amigo Foods Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank–N.Y., 39 N.Y.2d 391, 384 N.Y.S.2d 124, 348 N.E.2d 581 (1976); see also Ehrlich–Bober & Co. v. University of Houston, 49 N.Y.2d 574, 427 N.Y.S.2d 604, 404 N.E.2d 726 (1980) (upholding personal jurisdiction over defendant public university located in Texas based upon use of a correspondent bank in New York to carry out a transaction with plaintiff New York securities dealer where other contacts existed—i.e., the disputed “reverse repurchase” agreements involved phone calls and visits to plaintiff’s office in New York, and the placing of a securities order and delivery and payment in that office); Banco Ambrosiano v. Artoc Bank & Trust, 62 N.Y.2d 65, 476 N.Y.S.2d 64, 464 N.E.2d 432 (1984) (quasi-in-rem jurisdiction exists where defendant Bahamian bank regularly used its New York correspondent account to accomplish its international banking business, including the loan transaction at issue); Indosuez Intl. Fin. v. National Reserve Bank, 98 N.Y.2d 238, 746 N.Y.S.2d 631, 774 N.E.2d 696 (2002) (upholding personal jurisdiction over defendant Russian bank that maintained a bank account in New York and regularly used it in connection with currency-exchange options transactions, thus establishing a “course of dealing” in New York).

Plaintiff Amigo Foods Corporation (Amigo), a New York wholesaler, contracted to buy several truckloads of potatoes from defendant E.H. Parent, Inc. (Parent), a Maine potato grower and distributor; payment was to be made at or through Aroostook Trust Company (Aroostook), a Maine bank. Amigo obtained a letter of credit in New York from defendant Marine Midland Bank (Marine), which delivered it to Aroostook’s New York correspondent, defendant 700 898 Irving Trust Company (Irving). Amigo alleged that Parent refused to accept payment and thus breached the contract or, alternatively, that the banks wrongfully failed to deliver and pay Parent in accordance with the terms of the letter of credit. Parent, for its part, claimed never to have received payment and cross-claimed against the banks.

Aroostook made a pre-answer motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, stating in its supporting affidavit that “[b]eyond the notification to its depositor of the arrival of the Letter of Credit and the notification to Irving ..., who had forwarded the Letter of Credit ..., [it] took no action, and had none to take”; and, therefore, “did not act in New York out of which the cause of action arose” (Amigo Foods, 39 N.Y.2d at 394, 384 N.Y.S.2d 124, 348 N.E.2d 581). In opposition, Amigo alleged that Aroostook and Irving were agents or, alternatively, their relationship was uncertain *336 and so depositions were warranted on the question of jurisdiction. Supreme Court agreed that depositions were called for, but the Appellate Division, with two Justices dissenting, reversed and granted Aroostook’s motion to dismiss, concluding that Irving,

“as Aroostook’s correspondent, was not the latter’s agent in New York, but, rather, these banks were, at most, independent contractors with respect to each other. Aroostook, itself, not having transacted any business here and not having purposefully interjected itself into the transactions here and Irving, not constituting its agent here, it follows that there was no transaction of business in New York by Aroostook.” (48 A.D.2d 628, 629, 368 N.Y.S.2d 7 [1st Dept.1975] [citations omitted].)

We reversed, holding that discovery should go forward because Amigo “alleged that an agency relationship exist[ed] between Aroostook and Irving and, from the pleadings and affidavits, it [was] obvious that their position [was] not frivolous” (39 N.Y.2d at 395, 384 N.Y.S.2d 124, 348 N.E.2d 581). Notably, in so holding we rejected both Amigo’s position “that the undisputed fact that Irving [was] the New York correspondent for Aroostook [was] sufficient, in and of itself, to resolve the jurisdictional issue in [its] favor”; and Aroostook’s counter, adopted by the Appellate Division, “that correspondent banks [were], at best, independent contractors with respect to each other and, thus, that their relationship cannot serve as a jurisdictional basis” (id. at 395–396, 384 N.Y.S.2d 124, 348 N.E.2d 581). It was in this context that we stated as follows:

“In sum, we conclude that, standing by itself, a correspondent bank relationship, without any other indicia or evidence to explain its essence, may not form the basis for long-arm jurisdiction under [CPLR 302(a)(1)]” (id. at 396, 384 N.Y.S.2d 124, 348 N.E.2d 581).

Disclosure proceedings, we concluded, should reveal “whether Aroostook purposely availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in New York thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws ... and, particularly, the precise nature of its relationship with Irving vis-a-vis the handling of letters of credit” (id., citing Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 [1958]).

After discovery was completed, Aroostook again unsuccessfully moved to dismiss. The Appellate Division unanimously reversed (61 A.D.2d 896, 402 N.Y.S.2d 406 [1st Dept.1978]), and this time we *337 affirmed (46 N.Y.2d 855, 414 N.Y.S.2d 515, 387 N.E.2d 226 [1979]). The facts disclosed during discovery, as related by the Appellate Division, showed that Aroostook had a long-standing correspondent banking relationship with Irving, with 899 701 whom Aroostook maintained a relatively small checking account. As Parent was making demands for payment, Amigo directed Marine to wire funds to Parent for its account, and Marine, in the interest of speed, chose to deposit those funds with Irving in New York to the credit of Aroostook for the benefit of Parent. Irving informed Aroostook of the deposit; Aroostook, in turn, informed Parent; Parent directed Aroostook to reject the funds; and Aroostook instructed Irving to do so. The Appellate Division remarked that “[o]n the previous appeal, the Court of Appeals said: ‘Standing by itself, a correspondent bank relationship, without any other indicia or evidence to explain its essence, may not form the basis for long-arm jurisdiction under [CPLR 302(a)(1)].’ In our view, disclosure has revealed nothing which forms the basis for long-arm jurisdiction over Aroostook in the present case. In particular, Aroostook has not ‘purposely availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in New York thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.’ On the contrary, it has passively and unilaterally been made the recipient of funds which at its customer’s direction it has declined” (61 A.D.2d 896, 897, 402 N.Y.S.2d 406 [citations omitted; emphasis added]).

As the Second Circuit commented, the general statement in Amigo Foods that a correspondent banking relationship “standing by itself” is insufficient to establish long-arm jurisdiction has been interpreted by “[s]ome New York State courts” to mean that “a nondomiciliary defendant’s maintenance and use of such an account in New York, standing alone, [is] ipso facto insufficient to support personal jurisdiction under the New York long-arm statute” (673 F.3d at 64 [emphasis added]). Relatedly, federal district court judges in the Circuit have cited these state court decisions and the general statement in Amigo Foods “to conclude that the ‘mere maintenance’ of a correspondent bank account in New York does not suffice to establish personal jurisdiction there” (id. at 65).

The Second Circuit then went on to explain that “[a]ssuming for present purposes that this ‘mere maintenance’ principle is a faithful articulation of [the] decision in Amigo Foods,” that *338 principle’s application to the facts of this case is unclear because there are arguably several interpretations of the qualifier “mere”—i.e., “that it is intended to distinguish the ‘maintenance’ of an account from its active use,” as plaintiffs suggest; “that other types of contacts with the forum—such as borrowing money in New York, signing notes payable in New York, or negotiating agreements in New York—are also required”; or “that a transaction of business in New York will not suffice unless the plaintiff’s cause of action also ‘arise[s] from’ that transaction—in other words that the second prong of the test must also be satisfied” (id. at 65). The court then suggested that perhaps “Amigo Foods [was] best read as standing for the proposition that the first prong of the long-arm jurisdiction test under [CPLR 302(a)(1)] ... may be satisfied by the defendant’s use of a correspondent bank account in New York, even if no other contacts between the defendant and New York can be established, if the defendant’s use of that account was purposeful” (id. at 66).

[1] This is an accurate summing up of New York law. The jurisdictional inquiry under CPLR 302(a)(1) necessarily requires examination of the particular facts in each case. And although determining what facts constitute “purposeful availment” is an objective inquiry, it always requires a court to closely examine the defendant’s 900 702 contacts for their quality (see Fischbarg v. Doucet, 9 N.Y.3d 375, 380, 849 N.Y.S.2d 501, 880 N.E.2d 22 [2007]). Thus, in Amigo Foods we focused on the nature and extent of Aroostook’s involvement in the deposit of funds intended to pay Parent in the correspondent account that Aroostook maintained at Irving in New York. As discovery revealed, Aroostook’s purported use of the account in this transaction, the sole potential basis for personal jurisdiction, was essentially adventitious—i.e., it was not even Aroostook’s doing.

[2] In the banking context, the requisite inquiry under CPLR 302(a)(1) ’s first prong may be complicated by the nature of interbank activity, especially given the widespread use of correspondent accounts nominally in New York to facilitate the flow of money worldwide, often for transactions that otherwise have no other connection to New York, or indeed the United States. As a result, determining in an individual case whether a foreign bank's maintenance and use of a correspondent account is purposeful or coincidental may often prove more difficult than *339 was the case in Amigo Foods, once the facts there were established. Nonetheless, complaints alleging a foreign bank's repeated use of a correspondent account in New York on behalf of a client—in effect, a “course of dealing” (see Indosuez, 98 N.Y.2d at 247, 746 N.Y.S.2d 631, 774 N.E.2d 696)—show purposeful avilment of New York's dependable and transparent banking system, the dollar as a stable and fungible currency, and the predictable jurisdictional and commercial law of New York and the United States.

Certified Question No. 2

“(2) Do the plaintiffs' claims under the Anti-Terrorism Act, the A [lien] T[ort] S[tatute],^[9] or for negligence or breach of statutory duty in violation of Israeli law, ‘aris[e] from’ LCB's transaction of business in New York within the meaning of N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 302(a)(1)?” (673 F.3d at 74.)

[3] We have interpreted the second prong of the jurisdictional inquiry to require that, in light of all the circumstances, there must be an “articulable nexus” (McGowan v. Smith, 52 N.Y.2d 268, 437 N.Y.S.2d 643, 419 N.E.2d 321 [1981]) or “substantial relationship” (Kreutter v. McFadden Oil Corp., 71 N.Y.2d 460, 527 N.Y.S.2d 195, 522 N.E.2d 40 [1988]) between the business transaction and the claim asserted. We have consistently held that causation is not required, and that the inquiry under the statute is relatively permissive (see McGowan, 52 N.Y.2d at 272, 437 N.Y.S.2d 643, 419 N.E.2d 321; Kreutter, 71 N.Y.2d at 467, 527 N.Y.S.2d 195, 522 N.E.2d 40). But these standards connote, at a minimum, a relatedness between the transaction and the legal claim such that the latter is not completely unmoored from the former, regardless of the ultimate merits of the claim.¹⁰ In effect, *340 the 901 703 “arise-from” prong limits the broader “transaction-of-business” prong to confer jurisdiction only over those claims in some way arguably connected to the transaction. Where this necessary relatedness is lacking, we have characterized the claim as “too attenuated” from the transaction, or “merely coincidental” with it (see Johnson v. Ward, 4 N.Y.3d 516, 520, 797 N.Y.S.2d 33, 829 N.E.2d 1201 [2005]).

[4] [5] Accepting the complaint's allegations as true, LCB's use of its AmEx correspondent account to transfer money for Shahid provided money for Hizballah to carry out terrorist violence, including the 2006 rocket attacks. Application of the second prong of the jurisdictional inquiry varies according to the nature and elements of the particular causes of action pleaded; here, LCB's alleged breach of various statutory duties. As personal jurisdiction is fundamentally about a court's control over the person of the defendant, the inquiry logically focuses on the defendant's conduct. Again, the complaint alleges that LCB engaged in terrorist financing by using its correspondent account in New York to move the necessary dollars. Taken as true, LCB arguably thereby violated duties owed to plaintiffs under the various statutes asserted as a basis for subject matter jurisdiction. Furthermore, the alleged breaches occurred when LCB used the New York account. Again, whether or not plaintiffs can prove these allegations at trial, including showing links between Shahid and Hizballah, and whether or not these allegations state a claim under the various statutes, the pleadings establish the “articulable nexus” or “substantial relationship” necessary for purposes of personal jurisdiction.

While it may be that LCB could have routed the dollar transactions on behalf of Shahid elsewhere, the fact that LCB used a New York account “dozens” of times indicates desirability and a lack of coincidence. Presumably, using the AmEx account was cheaper and easier for LCB than other options, and whatever financial and other benefits LCB enjoyed as a result allowed the bank to retain Shahid as a customer and to support its allegedly terrorist activities and programs.

[6] In sum, repeated use of the correspondent account shows not only transaction of business, but an articulable nexus or substantial relationship between the transaction and the alleged breaches of statutory duties. LCB did not route a transfer for a terrorist group once or twice by mistake. Rather, plaintiffs allege that LCB deliberately used a New York account again and again to effect its support of Shahid and shared terrorist goals. *341 Not all elements of the causes of action pleaded are related to LCB's use of the correspondent account. And the specific harms suffered by plaintiffs flowed not from LCB's alleged support of a terrorist organization, but rather from rockets. Yet CPLR 302(a)(1) does not require that every element of the cause of action pleaded must be related to the New York contacts; rather, where at least one element arises from the New York contacts, the relationship between the business transaction and the claim asserted supports specific jurisdiction under the statute.

Accordingly, the certified questions should be answered in the affirmative.

Chief Judge LIPPMAN and Judges CIPARICK, GRAFFEO, SMITH and PIGOTT concur.

704 902 Following certification of questions by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and acceptance of the questions by this Court pursuant to section

500.27 of the Rules of Practice of the New York State Court of Appeals, and after hearing argument by counsel for the parties and consideration of the briefs and the record submitted, certified questions answered in the affirmative.

All Citations

20 N.Y.3d 327, 984 N.E.2d 893, 960 N.Y.S.2d 695, 2012 N.Y. Slip Op. 07854

Footnotes

- 1 In February 2011, the United States Department of the Treasury designated LCB as a “primary money laundering concern” (76 Fed. Reg. 9403 [Feb. 17, 2011]). The privately-owned bank subsequently merged with the Lebanese subsidiary of the French bank, Société Générale SA.
- 2 “Shahid,” translated as “Martyr,” allegedly provides support for Hizballah fighters and their surviving families. There is evidence the foundation is involved with the overall financing of Hizballah's activities.
- 3 “Any national of the United States injured in his or her person, property, or business by reason of an act of international terrorism, or his or her estate, survivors, or heirs, may sue therefor in any appropriate district court of the United States and shall recover threefold the damages he or she sustains and the cost of the suit, including attorney's fees” (18 USC § 2333[a]).
- 4 “The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action by an alien for a tort only, committed in violation of the law of nations or a treaty of the United States” (28 USC § 1350).
- 5 “[A] person who by his negligence causes damage to another commits a civil wrong” (Israeli Civil Wrongs Ordinance § 35); “Breach of statutory obligation ... (a) A person commits a breach of a statutory obligation if he does not comply with an obligation imposed on him under any enactment [if intended for the benefit or protection of another person, which means] (b) ... it is intended for the benefit or protection of that person, or for the benefit or protection of persons in general or of persons of a category or definition to which that certain person belongs” (id. § 63).
- 6 AmEx also moved to dismiss under Federal Rule 12(b)(6). Plaintiffs, in their amended complaint, pleaded a single cause of action against AmEx for negligence under Israeli law. The District Court Judge decided there was no actual conflict between the applicable New York and Israeli substantive law, and the pleadings were insufficient to state a negligence claim against AmEx under New York law (704 F.Supp.2d 403, 408–411 [S.D.N.Y.2010]). The Second Circuit affirmed solely on the basis that, even assuming there was no actual conflict, a choice-of-law analysis required application of New York law to plaintiffs' negligence cause of action against AmEx, and plaintiffs conceded that this claim failed if New York law applied (672 F.3d 155 [2d Cir.2012]).
- 7 In Tamam, which LCB mentions throughout its brief, Israeli citizens who were injured or whose family members were killed in the missile attacks during the Second Lebanon War sued five Lebanese banks (not including LCB) under the ATS. The plaintiffs alleged that the banks' provision of correspondent banking services to various parties associated with Hizballah constituted terrorism financing as well as conspiracy and aiding and abetting Hizballah to commit genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and terrorism. The court dismissed the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction, finding first that the Lebanese banks did not transact business in New York because the plaintiffs (unlike plaintiffs here) did not allege actual transfers from Hizballah front group accounts in Lebanon through correspondent banks in New York; specifically, the “only one relevant jurisdictional allegation” was that, “[o]n information and belief, [the Lebanese banks] processed funds and cleared U.S. dollars for [the] direct benefit [of the Islamic Resistance Support Organization (IRSO), alleged to be a Hizballah-controlled entity tasked with raising funds to purchase weapons,] through the United States in this District” (677 F.Supp.2d at 727). Acknowledging that “[w]hile the processing of IRSO funds through correspondent banks may indicate that [the Lebanese banks] purposefully availed themselves of business opportunities in New York,” the court concluded that “the use of correspondent accounts in New York nonetheless [could not] form the basis of personal jurisdiction because the Amended Complaint [did] not set forth a ‘substantial relationship’ between the correspondent bank accounts and Hizballah's terrorist activity” (id.); specifically, “the events giving rise to the physical injuries and deaths for which Plaintiffs [sought] redress [were] missile attacks in Israel, not funds transfers in New York” (id. at 728). The Tamam plaintiffs did not appeal the dismissal of their complaint.

- 8 Plaintiffs did not appeal the lower court's denial of their alternative request for jurisdictional discovery.
- 9 As the Second Circuit pointed out, the United States Supreme Court will soon decide whether the ATS provides subject matter jurisdiction for federal courts to entertain civil actions against corporations for violations of customary international law (see Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 621 F.3d 111 [2d Cir.2010], cert. granted 565 U.S. —, 132 S.Ct. 472, 181 L.Ed.2d 292 [2011]). Depending on the outcome, Kiobel may render moot the question of whether personal jurisdiction exists over plaintiffs' ATS claim (see 673 F.3d at 73).
- 10 Indeed, in framing its inquiry about the second prong, the Second Circuit remarked that although the lower court correctly observed that the rockets launched by Hizballah were “the alleged immediate cause” of the damages claimed, plaintiffs were suing LCB “for its role in the transfer of funds to Hizballah[, and] the jurisdictional nexus analysis directs [the court] to consider the relationship between ... plaintiffs' claims and LCB's alleged transactions in New York,” not “reach[] a conclusion that properly bears upon the ultimate merits of plaintiffs' claims, which seek to hold LCB liable for damages allegedly inflicted by Hizballah” (673 F.3d at 67–68).

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.